Chic workout wear is practically a must-have at this point. There are so many fitness-fashion brands it's gotten hard to keep track. As for me, while I always want to look cute when I work out, it's also really important that I am actually able to sweat in what I wear to my workout. If I can't squat in my leggings, they're a bit useless. So when I heard that celebrity trainer Anna Kaiser, a celebrity trainer whose devotees include Ashley Graham and Karlie Kloss, had teamed up with C9 by Target to create a new, limited edition fitness line, I had to be one of the first to try it. After all, she's not just a fitness maven—with clients like that, she has to know a thing or two about style, also. And as if I wasn't excited enough, every single item in this 16-piece apparel collection is under $43. Not only do I need to be able to move in my gear, I'm not wild about paying \$90 for pants I'm just going to get sweaty, so this was great news.

But I was reserving my final judgement until I actually worked out in the stuff. And what better way to try it than during one of Anna Kaiser's signature workouts? I threw on three of my favorite pieces—the “Gym Hair Don’t Care” trucker hat, this mesh-overlay bra, and the sleeveless sweatshirt hoodie and got to work, taking advantage of the at-home workout content offered on Kaiser's website for her studio, AKT.

While I did have to lose the hoodie before I finished the moves (I got pretty sweaty!), the clothing all held up well.

The hoodie was great to wear while warming up and getting the blood flowing, and the bra was sweat-wicking and breathable. Plus, it didn't make me feel smashed down like some multilayered bras can. Overall, it gets my stamp of approval.
